The Impact of Historical Trauma in Black Counselor Education Doctoral Students

This transcendental qualitative study explores the experiences of Black Counselor Education doctoral students (BCEDS) from multiple rural universities regarding the effects of systemic oppression and historical trauma on academic, personal, and professional well-being. Additionally, this current researcher hopes data from this study will (a). enhance mental health services for this group, (b). address disparities, (c). inform culturally responsive practices, (d). advance social justice, & equity, and (e). empowering Black individuals.
